

2012

LANSCCE Topical User Meeting

January 9 & 10

Abstract

Fast-neutron Imaging Applications at WNR

T.N. Taddeucci
LANSCCE-NS

The LANSCE WNR facility produces fast-neutron beams with energies ranging from ~100 keV to hundreds of MeV. Two imaging technologies that have been employed in recent years are storage-phosphor image plates and amorphous-silicon panel detectors. The primary use for these imaging techniques has been beam diagnostics, although some radiographic applications have also been tested.